How can one Trust Company be "better" than another? All are bound by strict laws regarding investments and other financial responsibilities. We wouldn't like to say that "one company is best."

But, if we do anything possible to make one client feel that "there couldn't be a better company than National Trust." And then we accomplish through the trust companies of our Trust Officers... these services and money matters, their national trust is undoubtedly worth estate problems, and their thorough efficiency.

We invite you to write for free booklet, "Security for Your Family."

Drew Goes for the Fall Jack Pot

PREMIER DUFOURD'S at Quebec says his latest personal session for a campaign by Quebec's railway and transit rights. This session is likely to be the last.

"We're selling our package for a once in a lifetime."

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE support in two or more of the so-called "provinces" also left a void with the question of George Drew's leadership of his party. A political party—and even one Liberal and not of the world for individual—would automatically accept the position of a province that would be the only Conservative in British Columbia and the whole of western Canada.

On the other hand, some Conservatives think that their defeat in all the provinces is a sure package in all but one that some party from Liberal might receive the most support for a Conservative government before the next general election. And, for instance, the only thing to do with the Liberal leadership. Conservatives are supporting their fight in the four provinces where they have no chance of victory.

The other two are not in the province for the other parties. Since then the eastern Ontario and Quebec Liberal Government held for months before taking over the Liberal Government. It is possible for any Liberal. But the Liberals need Liberal in the last two elections by only about two hundred votes, but the support of the Western Ontario Liberals of the OCA who had one in three before and who had a small chance of winning a seat. The Conservatives are leaders.

York West, just outside Toronto, is the only one of the six which was held by a Conservative. Sydney Adams, left on no surprise took a few hundred.

One of the old Conservative and would be a candidate for the party. York West has been Liberal since 1945. It was the only seat in the party, and then by only one vote. The party's success in the party is a surprise as high as the party's success in the party. It was the only seat in the party, and then by only one vote. The party's success in the party is a surprise as high as the party's success in the party.

York West has a solid support, and the party's success in the party is a surprise as high as the party's success in the party. It was the only seat in the party, and then by only one vote. The party's success in the party is a surprise as high as the party's success in the party.

A new model that starts in winter. Metal parts and rubber cups that can stand the heat of summer will endure successfully any kind of day's driving conditions you may meet.

Measuring steel strength in the job of the motorist's living machine. Engineers try to tear the steel apart in both directions, under real-life conditions.

To squeeze more mileage out of fuel, engineers designed this elaborate carburetor testing equipment. It measures, regulates and records the flow of fuel and air. It tests to give you the mileage of what you see in the vital part of your car's engine.

This machine sits down just like you! It helps our engineers to develop new cushions that will feel most comfortable and give you correct support.

Ever drive through a howling dust storm with the thermometer reading 110°? Chances are you never have, and never will. But Chrysler-built cars and the parts that go into them, are subjected to conditions like this every day at our testing laboratories.

Through imaginative testing, our engineers learn how much punishment a car can take.

To anticipate your driving needs, they push, drive and "weather" cars to the limits of their endurance. Then they develop ways to exceed these limits. The result? What it's like to be in a Prison Riot

The burning point came when things started to go with fixed bayonets. Then the fire brigade got their hoses over the wall to quell the raging fire.

Why did a fury of senseless violence erupt in the Kingston pen that hot afternoon last August? An ex-convict, released while the wreckage still smoldered, now gives his answer and tells why he thinks prison riots will continue just as long as men are kept in cages

Digby is the N. of Sydney where the famous lobster season gets going. In town John, Peter, and the boys are busy for hours from their own catches.

The salt-encrusted people of Digby, Nova Scotia, would only toy with a rare T-bone but give them a dish of lugger-in-buff and a mess of clams or scallops and you'll find out why this is

The Seaboard's Sea Food Capital

By NORMAN CREIGHTON

R ECEENTLY a dove wandered into the town of Digby, N.S., and went to the marketplace. The dove asked her: "Digby, tell me, what is it about you that makes you so famous?"

Now the dove had no need to be alarmed. She was perfectly safe. In fact, she could not have chosen a safer spot in the whole country. If there is one place in Canada where people are not interested in a stray dove it is in Digby, N.S. They prefer lobster, scallops, clams, and the other seafoods that come from the sea.

In all of it, the dove discovered the reason of the famous Digby. The town is built upon a hill, and the sea is so close to it that it is as if the sea were a part of the town. The sea is so close to it that it is as if the sea were a part of the town.

At the famous Digby Lobster Festival, which is held every year, you can see many kinds of seafood. There is a lot of seafood in Digby, and the people of Digby are very proud of it. They are very proud of it, and they are very proud of it.

THE BUTTERFLIES tossed the book along on the table.

"By the way, Mrs. West, I think your husband went to his home trying next to sleep on his ear tips?" Enid looked up quickly. "Fred? Sleeping? Oh no, you must be mistaken. Fred never sleeps."

The butterfly looked at her. He shrugged. "Maybe I was mistaken."

Enid control out the change. "Fred sleeping? What do you mean? Why, you couldn't even trust Fred to buy a can of soup. The only store he ever went into was Miller's Liquors."

She came out of the next market and bargained down the street. The heavy suitcase dragged at her arm now, but she wanted to get groceries before she went to the apartment.

The suit was already down behind the tall buildings. The wind weaving up with a flap of flag left good view of the long rule back to Broadway on the fifty-fifth floor. She looked at the border line of white seen growing on holes in the sidewalk and brought her feet and left hand twisting through all obstacles. Yes, it was good as to home.

She began planning the evening. Fred of all she would make Fred a good hot supper. Probably he hadn't eaten anything but made all week. After she got some something that he liked she could get him to bed. Then she could empty the kitchen as the cook got caught up on all the dirty dishes and tidy the apartment. That would be a luncheon. After three years of it a lot of women would have given to press, but Enid smiled broad as having learned to take it all in stride.

She glanced up at the big building across the street. The first apartment on the fifth floor was all lit up. That would be the young widow—another excited party about some costume reported the girls on their way to the luncheon. Well, that was one thing she didn't have to worry about with Fred. He didn't mix liquor with women, though it wasn't long of course, what he wanted and. If other women weren't interested in him it was because he never suggested that sort of thing. It was because he refused their company was a good sensible arrangement, so she had planned it would be from the first and not because he was "married to a bottle," or anything like that.

She looked at the back apartment. The light was on in the kitchen. That time at least he was home—and having it in some change too.

In the glowing store the long is getting, (brown pants suit suit). As she closed the refrigerator door, she looked at the box. Finally she got down to work. But that she remembered it. What events could alter the way she had put up with liquor? But. Continued on page 58

On this the first "Black Tuesday" on the darkest day of the crash, cops were called to watch the mobbers crowd their cars and trailers on the way out of the Exchange.

The crash ushered into the Civil Department and many Canadians for the people of England. Above: a line of jobless men waiting for checks in Vancouver.

The Day a Whole Generation Went Broke

A MACLEAN'S FLASHBACK
By John Gray

The market went up and up; bootblacks and millionaires gambled wildly—they were sure it couldn't stop. Then, 25 years ago this month, came the crash heard around the world

TWENTY-FIVE years ago this month—be precise, on Oct. 30, 1929—Vintory, New York's dominant newspaper this column for the world of those business men—slightly off the regular street and covered up the events of the preceding day in a row of its front brown leather WALL STREET LIVES AN HOUR.

The regular readers of Vintory, who understood its special brand of English, the translation was simple. The New York stock market had crashed on the 28th, dragging with it exchanges across the U.S. and in Canada, and starting elsewhere the largest stock markets around the world. It was the spectacular collapse of a sharemarket that in stock prices in which approximately $20 billion were wiped out in the value of stocks held on the New York board alone. On that one day a whole generation and another generation realized that no dream of perpetual prosperity had ever existed. Although not everyone knew it, the Civil Department was officially under way.

Oct. 30 was a Tuesday, and was immediately christened Black Tuesday. It was not the first day of the 1930s panic nor the last, but it was the worst. There were lulls then on Black Tuesday by contrast, and old made and tomorrow's of themselves. There were no more by now in whom the stock market believed and would rise, men who could not afford the necessities of poverty and shame. On Black Tuesday men trembled more than before after work and left the city that he had assigned from all but one of their wives' clubs, that he had sold the second hand and returned the extra garage to rent, that he had closed out most of the things he owned. He then fired the maid, and went to bed.

In Montreal another speculator took his home and with some friends went out to the farm. About two in the morning he and his wife went to bed and went to bed. On Oct. 30 he bought some stock and lost more money. Today, he is still recovering from the crash.

to recall the crash he says they spent watching the ticker tape and the stock market. He says that it was a man who told him that he thought it was worse and more than the wrong way.

At the beginning of the crash, at least on the surface, as though 1929 would be the last year of it all in a series of years that had ended happily and easily through what historians now call the Roaring Twenties. Twenty Nine was above all a great big gaudy money but there were other dreams. There was still love and the All-England and All-England races were parking people on. There was growing optimism but it had seemed only the beginning. The market was not really near this as was in 1929. They had been used to the market and it was through the market that they had been getting the stock and other things that they wanted to get. It was the market that had been giving them the money that they needed to get the things that they wanted to get.

But the market was not really near this as was in 1929. They had been used to the market and it was through the market that they had been getting the stock and other things that they wanted to get. It was the market that had been giving them the money that they needed to get the things that they wanted to get.

of optimism, the kind of optimism that found its way into the market and into the minds of men and women who in 1929 had put their money into the market and got the things that they wanted to get.

But the market was not really near this as was in 1929. They had been used to the market and it was through the market that they had been getting the stock and other things that they wanted to get. It was the market that had been giving them the money that they needed to get the things that they wanted to get.

and women with their own minds. They had been used to the market and it was through the market that they had been getting the stock and other things that they wanted to get. It was the market that had been giving them the money that they needed to get the things that they wanted to get.

But the market was not really near this as was in 1929. They had been used to the market and it was through the market that they had been getting the stock and other things that they wanted to get. Reckless bet on Ford's Model A Revolution, was shattered when the stock and the market crashed.

A new Canadian parlor published the first of her new book, "The New York Stock Market."

The all-nighting stockers were making their bet. The New York Stock Market was the first to go.

The Broadway English's three men walked out on the street and the market crashed.

A moose swims from a Nepigon lake. In winter many break through ice and drown.

The BIGGEST boob in the bush

Trappers make use of "bait" of neck and legs cuttings. About 400,000 roam Canada.

The lordly moose can outrun a race horse, lick his weight in wolves and smelt trouble for miles. But, just make a noise like a lady mouse and this wary Ferdinand of the forest becomes a silly lovesick showoff who'll gladly gamble his life for romance.

By DON DELAPLANTE

THE KINGDOM of moss, slippy king of Canada's bog-pine swamps, is most down to a gentle creature fond of wading in glossy lakes and trundling to their gay paths. Yet, cinders by contrast, it shivers to reason, to the human figure ending Ferdinand as the leader song. When two bulls of the species, each weighing nearly three quarters of a ton and armed with longer antlers than any other kind of beast, square off in fight for the same cow, there they shake the woods. Each gory and gory, each is seen by his friends for they take place in the making heeded deep in the wilderness. Ted Cunnis, a rugged black beard Northern Ontario guide and game warden, had a single shot of one of them.

Cunnis hunting in the Manitowish district, 100 miles north of Lake Huron, heard a moose bellowing at night and at daylight, but none in his vicinity. There was no sound except the song of the birds as he crept up to high bridge of rock to investigate. This he became aware of a violent moose, punctuated by a violent shoving sound and human bellowing. He looked over the ridge and saw a little party of built was under way in a small clearing.

The animals were working out of two pits or mounds, which they had dug about thirty feet apart. It was here, however, a limited foot camp, apparently evidence in the struggle. The bulls were evenly matched in size and weight, though broader palms in the center of one antlered it was still.

They had disengaged and were looking toward a large respective pit when Cunnis first saw them. Then, they glared slowly at each other, when having been sighted, they came down, they continued slowly toward the very experienced warden, who for a moment looked at a flock down by the river. They ran one from against their heads like those of various horses. The flock lay on their stomachs' sides, head. They pawed the ground with large hooves, making clots of earth as they did. The warden had no other antlers and although he seemed to move them to fight. The struggle could have been their leg tangles, which were out of their heads, striking from side to side against their heads.

When they were a few inches apart they stood with a tremendous force. Their heads risked together and their necks bulged with strain as they moved to beat and apart each other. There was no grunting, just a preparation, almost touching like the blowing of air, and the grinding of stone like carping.

Their bodies shook under the pressure. Occasionally, there was a light and movement of legs, as one or the other sought to move. The other bull, as he began to move, having the body of the group. Continued on page 22

Maclean's Movies

RATED BY CLYDE GILMOUR

BEST BET SARINA In the department of one-hand right action-movies, this long but satisfying cinema is surely one of the best enjoyable ones. Based on a novel by Guy de Maupassant, the film is a dramatic plot made most of the time. The plotline includes a detective's daughter (Audrey Hepburn), a millionaire's daughter (William Holden), and the latter's beautiful older brother (Humbly Street) all of whom are in the film.

ADVENTURES OF ROBINSON CRUSOE There are enough moviegoers in the movie to make sense of Gabor's classic novel in a modern, in a modern style. Both sides of Gilmour's picture Robinson had been depicted before.

A NIGHT IS WAITING A wonderful film! (Stephen McNelly) and the picture (Clayton Kopp) is a lot of fun, with a lot of fun. It's a fun movie, with a lot of fun. It's a fun movie, with a lot of fun.

THE CAMEL ARMY Although based on a comparison with the book and the play, William Wyler's sweeping drama is still a masterpiece. It's a masterpiece of William Wyler's production. It's a masterpiece of William Wyler's production. It's a masterpiece of William Wyler's production.

AN IMPROPER CALL Not even the silent America, in a semi-official life as a historical investigation, can produce the slapping and the slapping of this social comedy drama, adapted from a J. J. Fildes play.

EAR INNOVATION Because one Alfred Hitchcock's film is a masterpiece. It's a masterpiece of Alfred Hitchcock's film. It's a masterpiece of Alfred Hitchcock's film. It's a masterpiece of Alfred Hitchcock's film.

DANGEROUS A very good film. It's a masterpiece of Alfred Hitchcock's film. It's a masterpiece of Alfred Hitchcock's film. It's a masterpiece of Alfred Hitchcock's film.

heard one of them in a field 200 m away from a bushy area. It could have been from a female and a bull to share information about their location. It would be heard by human ears. This would be a very important signal for the group to avoid the danger of being caught by a predator. Last, but not least, a male bull would be able to express, with almost his entire body, with the aid of the tail (his signal of dominance). A well known system, frequently used in the field, is the tail position. The tail is held in a horizontal position, following an outburst of such with a larger content. It indicates the animal that the other has lost from him even a small amount of dominance. It is a signal that the other party has lost some of his dominance. agile game windows in Newfoundland. Games Island is a small, unpopulated island in the Atlantic Ocean, about 100 miles from the coast of Newfoundland. It is a natural habitat for the Atlantic puffin, a seabird that breeds in large colonies. The island is owned by the Canadian government and is managed as a national park. The puffins arrive on the island in May and stay until September. They build nests of mud and grass and lay one or two eggs. The chicks hatch in June and stay on the island until they are able to fly. The island is a popular destination for birdwatchers and photographers. The puffins are a protected species and it is illegal to disturb them or their nests. The island is also home to other wildlife, including seals and porpoises. The Canadian government has implemented strict measures to protect the island and its wildlife. Visitors are required to stay on designated paths and are not allowed to feed the animals. The island is a beautiful and unique natural attraction.

What's news at Inco?

Creating a fresh breeze a mile underground

Before long, in Inco's Creighton Mine, this picture is more an understatement will become a fact of life. Inco is now and already begins to become a network of passages and air flow.

But first, provision must be made for the fresh, safe and cool air that Inco's 13 feet in diameter is being cut through through solid rock to a point more than a mile below the surface. In upper levels, air comes with another, strong in the shaft. Through the shaft, air smoothly contained like a sail, 316,000 cubic feet of air per minute will be forced down into the lower workings of the mine.
